EISENHOWER'S POLITICAL CREED

De-Centralization of Powers Would Re-Vitalize the States

By Kevin McCann President, The Defiance College (Second of 12 articles based on the book, "The Man From Abilene.")

ROM the writings, public and private, of General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower there emerges this basic formula for keeping the Federal budget in balance, for maintaining a sound currency and for restoring the functional and geographical diffuof political power envisaged by the framers of the Constitution 1. "Practice Spartan frugality in non-essential matters, so that we may make the greatest possible contribution to the defense of our way of life."

"local citizens will keep a closer through their benevolent wisdom upon our local rights and freedom. Today the 'grants-in-aid' policies of debase our currency in order to pay its bills."

Gen. Eisenhower, when he was army chief

Six Months EDITORIAL Every businessman knows of the drain being placed on his finances by the numerous drives that are carried on throughout the year. While most of them like the Red Cross, Cancer Crusade, flood relief and different local projects are usually worthwhile, it is impossible to keep contributing. To stay in business a firm has to watch that rapidly narrowing wargin between profitable and unprofitable operation. There comes a point when the answer to solicitors for school advertising or other drives must be no. A man is not going to put in long hours, take the responsibility of a business and risk his money just to be able to contribute to worthy causes.

In Basin Community they have found a possible solution for donating to worthwhile charities. The ninth grade of Basin school where E. D. Green is principal has dedicated a pecan tree to the Crippled Children's program. Any nuts this tree bears in future years will be gathered and sold by people in the community and the money contributed to Crippled Children's welfare work.

The possibilities of a project like this are unlimited. If each school in the county would plant a pecan tree and dedicate it to the Crippled Children, or any other fund, it wouldn't be necessary for any group to go begging for money to meet a quota. Any person in the United States could plant a tree of one kind or another, take care of it, and in a few years make a real contribution to his favorite charity without doing any

While passing out honors during this graduation season, THE CLIPPER wants to give recognition to those starting the project. They are E. D. Green, principal at Basin school, and ninth graders John Parker, Joan Parker, Lanelle Moore, Mack Moore, Harry Moody, Hubert Harrison, Catherine Wilks and Peggy Weeks.
